A Quarter Century of Laughter and Love

Hello everyone! I'd like to welcome you to John and Mary's 25th wedding anniversary! Wow. Twenty-five years together is definitely something to celebrate. It seems like your marriage has only grown stronger over the years. The strength comes from your shared laughter – let's not forget the disaster that was remodeling the kitchen together – and the quiet strength that's come from a shared love as you navigate the years together. Even just the other day, I spotted the two of you at the grocery store, bickering over what type of cereal to choose (and can I just say, Mary is right, that cereal is disgusting, John!). Even when times are tough, like when your son Billy broke his leg in football, I see the two of you only growing in love from each other's strengths.

Celebrating your anniversary is what brought us all together today. I'm so glad to not only call you my friends [or siblings/neighbors/etc.], but also family. The best way to honor your quarter century together is to raise a glass in your honor. To 25 more wonderful years full of laughter and love! Congratulations, John and Mary!
