"Thank you all for coming to my brother's wedding. I love my brother, dearly. You know that right, Brother? But I must admit we've always had a kind of competition going on between us. Yeah, Brother, you can't deny it. Sometimes, it wasn't very pretty."

"But today! I mean, Brother, I have to say, you took all this competitiveness between us to an extreme level by being the first one to get married. And yeah, you won the whole marriage competition, but you are so much more than the winner of our little competition. You are a star winner because you chose Bride to be your wife! You truly rose to stardom level in our competition when you somehow convinced this poor woman to marry you."

[If you were the first one to get married, then replace the previous paragraph with the following one.]

"But I beat you at the whole first to get married competition. And even though you're the loser, I have to say you are very much the winner by marrying, Bride! You truly rose to stardom level in our competition when you somehow convinced this poor woman to marry you."

[You can then continue.]

"No offense to you, Bride, because I love you dearly, too. But this is about my brother and his obsession to best me and just how far he's willing to go. You don't believe me? Once, when we were kids, he..."

[Insert an example that demonstrates this kind of sibling rivalry. Keep it fun and in a loving spirit.]

"Of course, I was the more mature one, I rose above the pettiness of such competition and..."

[Insert what you did to get back at him that shows you were not at all the more mature one.]

"In all seriousness, though, Brother and Bride I am so happy for the two of you. Watching the two of you preparing for your wedding, I realized just how much you adore each other."

[Turn to the guests for the final toasting.]

"Please raise your glasses and join me in toasting my wonderful brother and his new wife! May you always be the winners in life. I love both of you very much."
